Multistakeholder co-creation
facilitation for future-proof food systems

By Mariela Wismann - Rikolto

Rikolto's Good food for Cities programme

➤ We catalyze collective action among local food system actors to achieve urban food environments and food chains that facilitate healthy, sustainable and nutritious diets for all citizens as part of resilient and inclusive food systems at the city and regional levels.

Unlocking the power of...

To achieve sustainable incomes for farmers while producing nutritious and affordable food for all.

To create innovative ways to access, distribute, and produce quality, nutritious food so that no one is left behind.

To broaden the scope of our work, expanding our collaborations

To create more opportunities for greater impact and change.

Our approach

The MSP approach

Facilitating a multi-stakeholder process (MSP) is both an art and a science. There are some common steps and methods that lead to the establishment of a multi-stakeholder process. At the same time, facilitating a multi-stakeholder process is highly contextual and needs to be done flexibly to respond to unexpected dynamics (which will always arise!) Enjoy the journey!

Systems thinking

A fundamental perspective that helps us understand and navigate a context in which various actors and factors interact in known and unknown ways: the typical MSP context.

Stakeholder engagement

Shared vision

- As we interact with all stakeholders, it is critical to develop a shared vision: a particular future or desired change. This shared vision will be the common ground for a diverse group of stakeholders to work together and will be what holds them together.
- A common way to articulate such a shared vision is through a Theory of Change (ToC).
- Keep in mind that a shared vision:
 - ✓ Has a common starting point.
 - ✓ Connects
 - ✓ Is value-driven.
 - ✓ Generates commitment.
 - ✓ Is inclusive.
 - ✓ It inspires.
 - ✓ It is responsive.

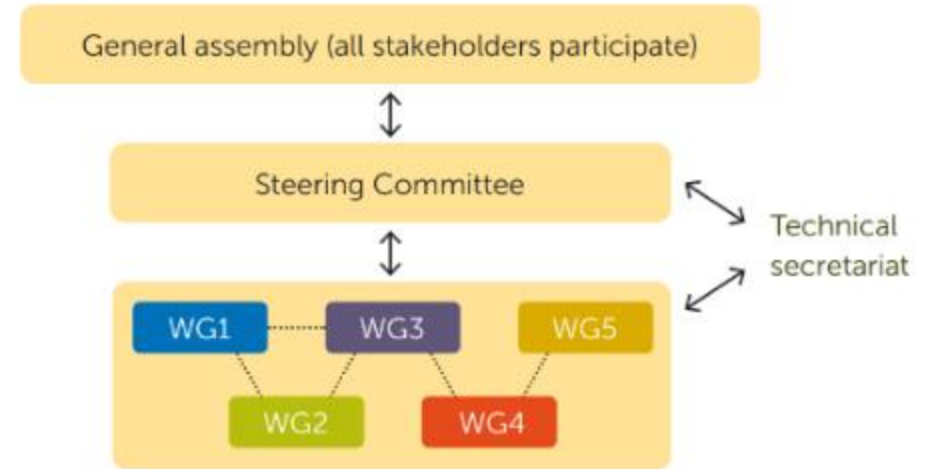

Multi-stakeholder governance

- A shared vision is not enough.
- We need to figure out how to work together, who makes decisions, and how to manage conflict.
- The governance system is a mix of predetermined (fixed) and dynamic (emergent) structures and interaction processes.
- Throughout the process, a co-creation governance system should consider three main actions in its functioning: i) dialogue and decision making, ii) joint implementation of activities, iii) monitoring and participatory learning.

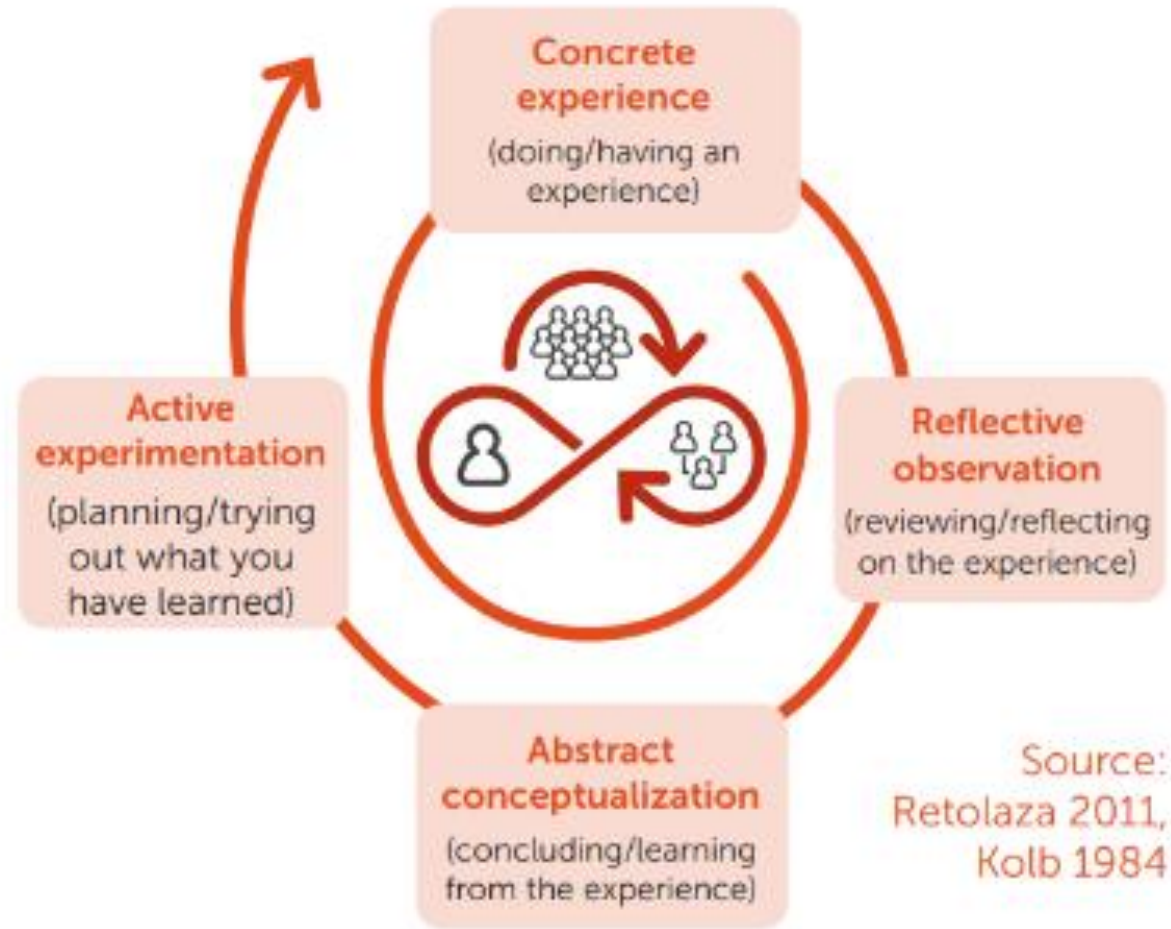

A generic example of a governance system with basic governing bodies

Learning and change

- Working together with other stakeholders to overcome a major challenge is a journey that is built day by day. It is important to support reflection and learning among stakeholders.
- This continuous spiral of active learning should lead them to question the status quo, find new solutions and implement them to contribute to systemic change.
- Individual, group and societal learning

Multi-stakeholder dialogue facilitation

Dialogue...

- Is at the heart of any co-creation process.
- Enables stakeholders to learn about each other's perspectives, uncover assumptions, find common ground, and open the door to unimaginable futures.
- Is an art that requires empathy, compassion, and self-awareness.

Depending on the context, consider:

- Involving an external facilitator.
- Maintaining a clear separation of roles (process-focused vs. content-focused)
- Rotating the facilitation role among co-creation members.
- Co-facilitating with someone from another organization (usually another Steering Committee member)

- The diversity of stakeholders;
- Cultural adaptation;
- Inclusive consultation;
- The importance of local solutions.

2. Design Thinking - Tadafor project

Challenges

- Low level of mutual trust between associations and local authorities
- Poor understanding of the concept of co-creation

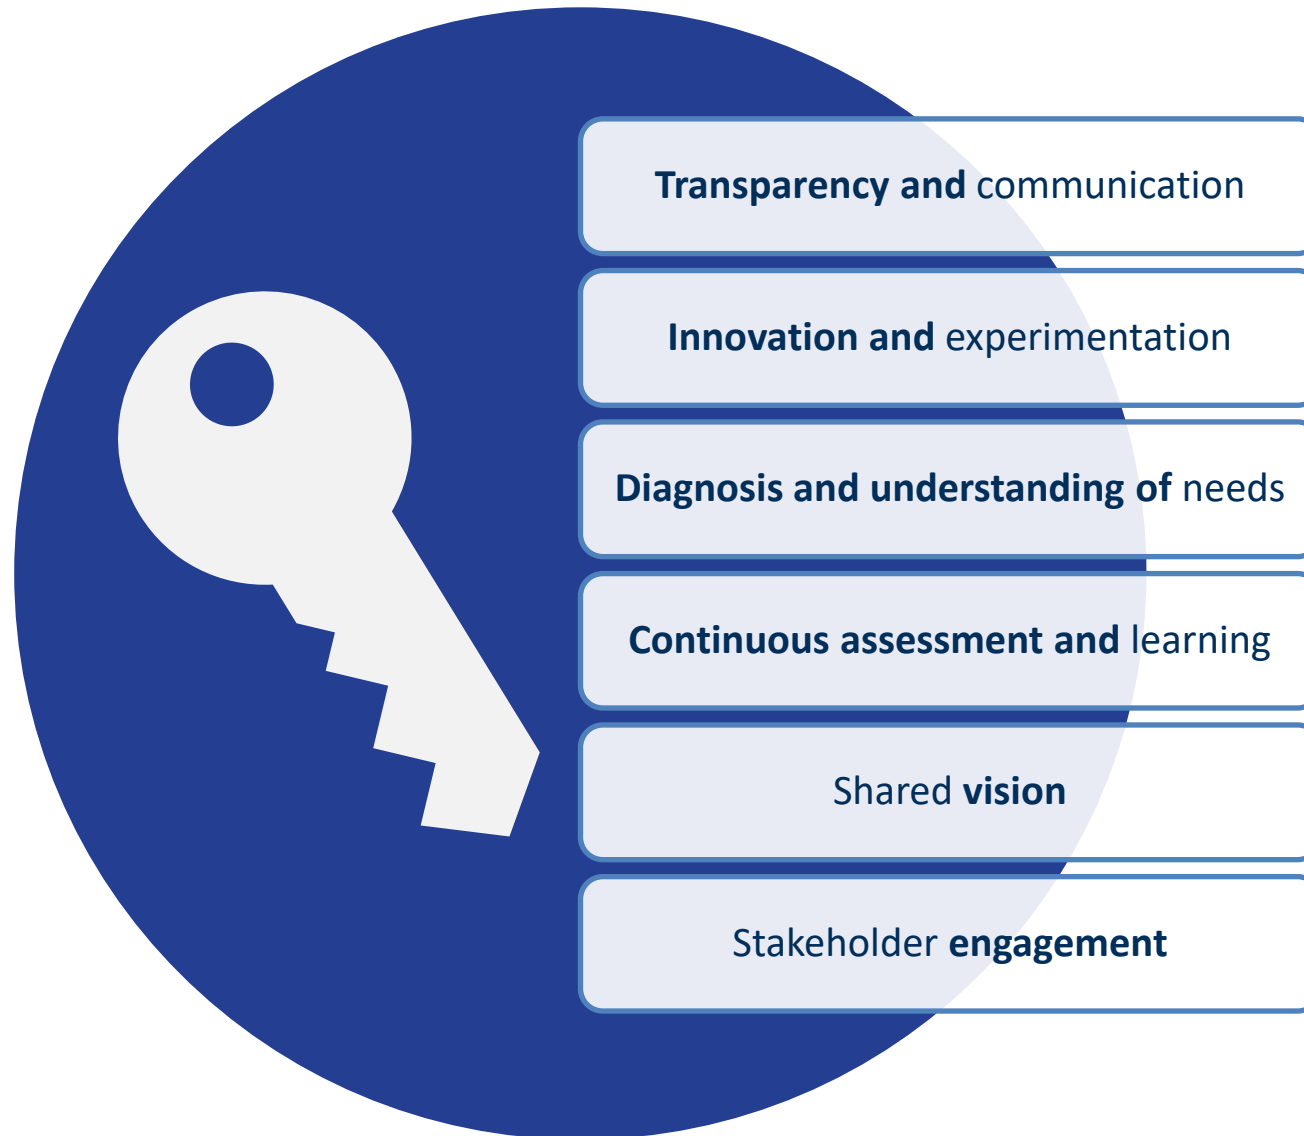

Solutions

- Strengthening professional relations and trust between associations and local authorities;
- Spreading the co-creation culture: awareness-raising, training and coaching

in Morocco

September 2023

The challenges of inclusion in co-creation

Citizens, key participants in co-creation in the public sector.

Challenges: those most affected by inequalities find it difficult to get involved in co-creation processes.

Strategies must be put in place to reorganise existing power relationships and ensure that everyone can participate actively.

Inclusion in co-creation - the case of Tadafor

What are the obstacles and levers to the inclusion of women and young people in civic participation?

1. Inclusive communication

What is the aim? Informing different groups of women and young people about citizen participation and co-creation processes and tools is essential to encourage their involvement in these processes.

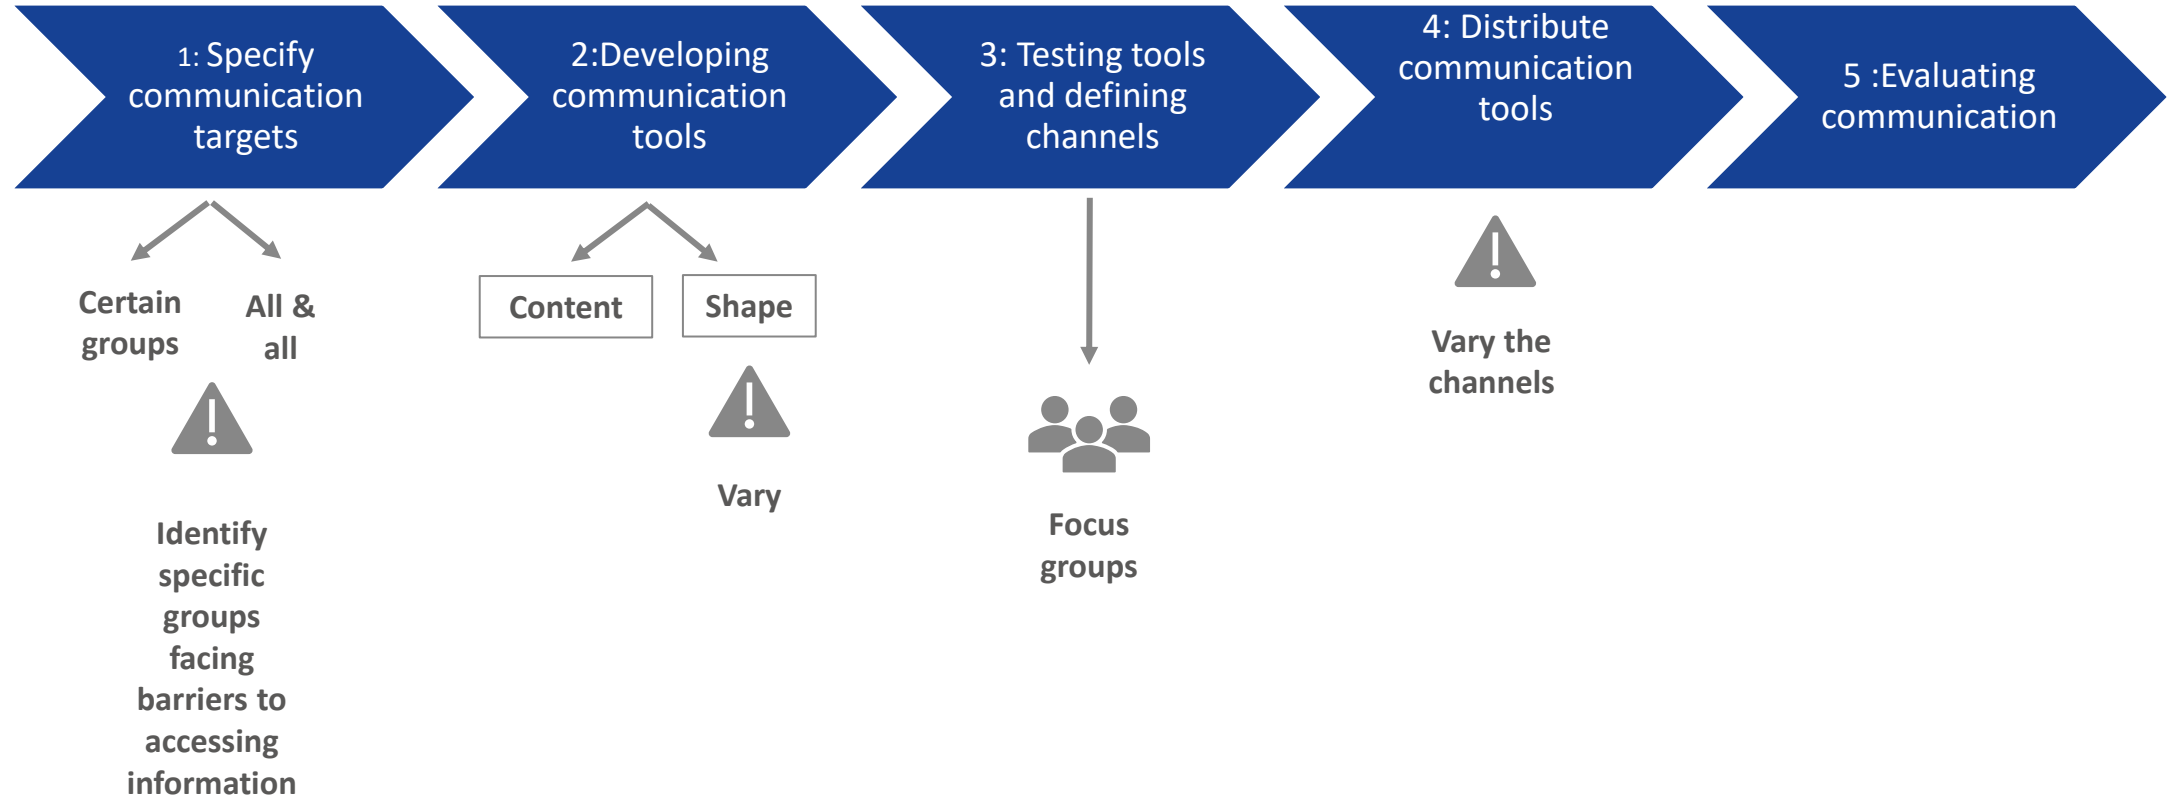

Context ? The methods and strategies described in this factsheet can be applied, for example, to communicate on :

- Holding a co-creation event such as a public consultation;
- A call for applications to join a youth council or neighbourhood committee;
- The existence of tools for citizen participation, such as an online platform.

Who is responsible for communication? The local authority, the province, the prefecture, the region, consultative bodies, civil society organisations, citizens, etc.

1. Inclusive communication

2. Active participation

What is the aim? To encourage the presence and active participation of women and young people, including those from more disadvantaged groups, in areas of co-creation and civic participation.

Context ? The methods and strategies described in this factsheet can be applied, for example, to communicate on :

- Holding a co-creation event such as a public consultation;
- A meeting organised by a youth council or neighbourhood committee;
